Objecting is a good thing?

Brian discusses the importance of objecting in sociocracy. An objection isn't a complaint; it means that something still needs to be clarified. It's part of caring for the organization by making sure that an idea doesn't move forward before it's fully developed.

"It was deeply touching to read all that wonderful gratitude pouring out for all the dedicated [community members] selflessly serving here." –
Connie Swan, CSIR

“I’m grateful for and amazed at how our team consistently plans, prepares, and presents three meals every day, no matter what we’re faced with (weather, delayed deliveries, equipment failure, etc.). You all shine exceptionally bright during the holiday season when everyone has even more to coordinate. I recognize all the work that gets done in the weeks, days, and hours leading up to the meals we serve on the ‘Big Day.’ Sincere thanks to everyone!”
– Ron Melinis
